British Comedy

As Time Goes By

In the early '50s, a young army officer and a student nurse fell in love. Four decades later, they meet again by accident. Just a wrinklies' reunion or will romance be rekindled?

One Foot in the Grave

One Foot in the Grave is an award-winning, imaginative tale of old age and life's little ironies. It explores the world of sixty-year-old Victor Meldrew, a black-humored anti-hero — and one of British television's great comic creations.

Last of the Summer Wine

Ripe for mischief, Britain's oldest (if not wisest) adolescents have been delighting television audiences around the world since 1973, making this the longest-running sitcom in the world. Each new series soars high in the ratings as the incorrigible senior citizens uncork a barrelful of laughs with all kinds of (gray) hair-brained schemes.

May to December

Alec Callendar is a balding, small-town solicitor, with big-time dreams. One day, into his life walks Zoe Angell, who has come to consult him about a divorce. On the face of it, an aging widower and a 27-year-old physical education teacher should have nothing in common. But a mutual love of old musicals and a whimsical sense of humor spark a romance.

Red Dwarf

Red Dwarf is an enormous spaceship, mining around the moons of Saturn with a crew of 169 members. Before the end of the first episode, 168 of them are dead, wiped out by a massive radiation leak, and it's all downhill from here on.
